North Korea is a communist state with a single legislative body called the Supreme People's Assembly. The country is divided into nine provinces and two municipalities. 8. North Korea's current head of state is Kim Jong Un, who took office in 2011. Earlier, his father was Kim Jong-il and grandfather Kim Il-sung, who has been named north Korea's eternal president. 9. During the Korean liberation from Japan, North Korea gained its independence on August 15, 1945. On September 9, 1948, the Democratic People's Republic of North Korea was founded when it became a separate communist country and after the end of the Korean War, North Korea became a closed totalitarian country, focusing on self-sufficiency to limit external influences. 10. Because North Korea focuses on self-sufficiency and is closed to outside countries, more than 90% of its economy is controlled by the government and 95% of goods produced in North Korea are manufactured by state-owned industries. This has created development and human rights issues in the country. The main crops in North Korea are rice, millet and other grains, while manufacturing focuses on the production of military weapons, chemicals and mining of minerals such as coal, iron ore, graphite and copper. Copper.
